Are you a writer who waits until the eleventh hour to begin work on a project? As a deadline draws near, are you organizing your desk, playing one more game of Solitaire or cleaning out the fridge? Tricia will share the tips that have helped her deal with this paralyzing habit.

Tricia L. Sanders is a former instructional designer and corporate trainer who traded in curriculum writing for novel writing because she hates bullet points and loves to make stuff up. She's on the board of the Missouri Writers' Guild and former president of Saturday Writers. When she's not stalking agents at conferences, she writes novels, short stories and essays. Her work has won numerous awards and appeared in The Globe Democrat, ByLine, The Cuivre River Anthology II and III, Sasee, Magnolia Quarterly, Great American Outhouse Stories; The Whole Truth and Nothing Butt and the 2007 Seven Hills Review.
